

Hotel Preston, Nashville, TN

An offbeat boutique hotel conquers “if it is Tuesday it must be Nashville, syndrome” without breaking the bank

by Margaret Littman | August 01, 2010

0 Comments

One person’s bargain is another’s splurge. Particularly when it comes to hotel rooms. For one traveler anything more than a bed, clean sheets, and a door that locks. For others, pillow menus, cocktail hours, and original art on the walls are necessities. That said, The Hotel Preston (733 Briley Parkway) is a value, if not a bargain, for those who want something a little different in a Music City hotel. This boutique hotel is near the airport, making it a short drive from downtown, from the Grand Ole Opry and other Opryland attractions when they re-open later this fall, and other must-sees.

Free parking. A business center open 24 hours. Want a rubber duckie in your bath? No problem. All for rates that are often significantly less than $100 night, depending on the day of the week and time of the year. Now, it’s hard not to think that a bargain.

Don’t skip the hotel’s funky Pink Slip lounge, which features the crayon artwork of favorite local artist Herb Williams.